Life Is Cheap In Prison ... Says 7th Step Director

"Life is cheap in prison", Bill Larson, Topeka director of the 7th Step Foundation, an organization founded to help rehabilitate ex-convicts, told the Cadets in an assembly the afternoon of Sept. 30.

"On the other hand, life on the outside is valuable and a person should do something with it," Larson told the students. "Do you want to know who the smart ones are in this life? Your mother and father ... your teachers ... the minister ... and last but not least the policeman."

Larson also spoke at an assembly at Salina High School during the morning.

"I'm not going to tell you jokes," Larson said. "My life hasn't been a joke. I'm an ex-convict. I have done 20 years day-by-day behind those big gray walls."

Larson said his last "stretch" was at the Kansas State Penitentiary at Lansing for a crime committed in Atwood. At Lansing, he met Bill Sands, founder of the 7th Step organization, who convinced him he was a fool to continue a life of crime. Upon his parole, Larson joined the program.

Larson tried to explain what type of life a person would find in prison. He says homosexuality abounds in most prisons.

"You walk through the receiving line and find you're in another world. You lip off to an old convict with perhaps 90 years to serve and right there you find out if you're going to be a man or a woman."

"Force is usually used to accomplish this. He's usually got a shank—that's a knife—to your throat."

Larson said a young convict has three options available in such a situation.

"If he runs to a guard and becomes a stoolie, he will have to spend the rest of his sentence segregated from the rest of the prisoners for his own protection.

The second option is submission.

The third option is to fight. "I've seen the black car, a hearse, drive away from the prison nine times in one year," Larson said. "Life is cheap."
