Top Teens' Tastes Turn Conservative

America's outstanding teens want the federal government to get its fingers out of the private sector's pie but they don't want the corporate slice to get any bigger.

This is among the findings in a nationwide survey of 23,900 high school juniors and seniors listed in "Who's Who Among American High School Students."

The majority of teens polled feel the government should maintain a hands-off policy in the areas of housing, wage and price control, guaranteeing jobs and health care. At the same time, almost three-quarters (74%) think the top 500 U.S. corporations hold too much political power and 62% say their power is too great economically.

If politicians really are provoking anti-private enterprise legislation, then there's a great gap in the understanding of these kids, because 66% are convinced that elected officials are influenced by wishes of major corporations.

So where would the teens like their tax dollars spent? If they could choose, almost all (90%) would allocate funds to education. Eight out of ten would fund energy conservation and 69% would back environmental preservation.

Preservation and protection of the country's free shores takes precedence with teens, too. Fifty-four percent would allocate tax dollars to defense and if a Third World conflict involving Communist support for one faction were to erupt almost half (47%) would give military aid to the pro-West, non-Communist forces. Another 45% would send military advisors.

This conservative stance extends to President's Carter's position on several key world issues. While human rights gets the nod from 72% of the teens, they agree with little else on the President's international agenda.

Back home again, the kids favor a great government shape-up and for the most part, agree with Carter's domestic proposals. Sixty-eight percent think government should be reorganized; a little over half (52%) opt for tax reform; two-thirds say the budget must be balanced and 59% think the welfare system ought to be overhauled.

If these kids make any kind of an impression, perhaps Big Brothers won't be looking over the shoulders of budding entrepreneurs in the next few years.
