The Chaplain's Corner

The Missionary Chaplaincy

Not long ago I read an article which was titled, "The Many Duties of a Priest". In that article I found that there was a glaring absence of any reference to the Chaplain, and more specifically, "The Many Ministries of a Chaplain". Truly, the duties and ministries of a priest are in the Chaplaincy, but along with that there are important and necessary contacts which are related specifically to the Chaplain.

For instance there aren't too many times in the parish ministry when you must, or get an opportunity to, counsel a person not to literally, "run-away"; or work through a death in the family with a child when the family is miles away; or counsel a child when his parents are in the painful struggle of divorce, again, when the family is miles away; or to point out to a child the need for, and the blessings of, a belief in God when the parents are miles away or not supportive in this endeavor. These are problems which are oriented toward the basic mission of the church but even more, toward the Missionary work of the Chaplain. I thank God that there is this opportunity, through the Chaplaincy, to show His love in all things from Creation to death to everlasting life!

"So faith, hope, love abide, these three; but the greatest of these is love." (1 Cor. 13:13)

God Bless You,

Fr. Norm +

Loof Lirpa (April Fool)

Why April Fool's Day on the first of next month?

One answer is from Brady's Clavis Calendaria, 1812:

"The joke of the day is to deceive persons by sending them upon frivolous and nonsensical errands; to pretend they are wanted when they are not or, in fact, any way to betray them into some supposed ludicrous situation, so as to enable you to call them 'an April Fool.'"

Another answer from Robin's Almanack for 1760 notes this: The first of April, some do say, is set apart for All Fools' Day. But why the people call it so, nor I nor they themselves do know.

"You'd better take me home now. My Dad's sense of humor stops with the 11 o'clock news."

★ OLD BOYS CORNER ★

Old Boy Gives Book Collection

John Hardman, Topeka, Kans., who attended SJMS from 1918-1920, has given 30 cartons of books to the School from his private library. Several of the books will be in a collection at the School's Library.

Several hundred books will be distributed to interested Cadets.

Maj. Larry Lysell, Director of Admissions, said that the highlight of the collection is Mr. Hardman's memory book from his years at St. John's. The book contains pictures of the Cadets, Vail Hall, sporting events and campus scenes.

Maj. Lysell has taken the "memory book" on several recruiting trips. He showed the book to Ralph Cramm Sr., Class of 1922, who was mentioned in the book several places. Lysell said, "Cramm seems to be mentioned primarily on the discipline reports."

He added: "We certainly encourage these donations from 'old boys'. It provides a meaningful experience for the Cadets currently enrolled."

Arbor Day Note: Trees—Man's Best Friend

Man's best friend is not his dog, but his tree! So says USDA's Forest Service.

For instance, we're aware that trees provide shade and beauty, but did you know that they dilute pollutants in the air by releasing oxygen? Or that they act as sound barriers to cut down on noise pollution? Or that decaying leaves replace minerals in the soil?

In urban areas the benefits from trees often get overlooked. To assure successful tree planting under adverse conditions, Forest Service scientists are searching throughout the world for tree strains that are resistant to attack by insects and diseases and that are hardy enough to withstand air pollution and people pressure.

Freshman Math Skills Don't Add Up

LAWRENCE -- The math skills of college freshmen don't add up to much, says a University of Kansas mathematics professor.

Nearly a quarter of the 1979-80 KU freshman class had to take a remedial math course in the spring or fall that earned them no college credit. Some had to take two such courses, which reached back to ninth-grade level skills such as fractions and simple equations. And the problem is not confined to Kansas.

A national survey by the American Council on Education of 187,000 students who entered college in the fall of 1980 recently revealed that 21.1 percent of them would need remedial math work, nearly twice the number who would need remedial work in English.

Charles Himmelberg, chairman of KU's math department, says part of this problem exists because high school students are not taking at least three years of math. By doing so they could avoid wasting time and money in remedial courses.

Himmelberg says high school students have not been advised to take enough math by their counselors, who seem to think universities no longer have basic math requirements.

Students will need more math than simple algebra and geometry, Himmelberg said. They should have at least an algebra, geometry and an algebra/trigonometry course.

Students who arrive at the University with three or four years of high school math usually do not have to take remedial courses, and they often can quiz out of one of the two required math courses, Himmelberg said.

"I expect that at many high schools the minimum state requirement for math has become the standard. Students are left with the impression that that's all they have to take."

"If you follow that guide, 'Math for Everyday Living' would be the only course required for college."

As the remedial math enrollments illustrate, these lower-level high school math courses don't prepare students adequately for what they will face later.

Need Teachers

The decline of math skills is not simply a matter of poor counseling at the high school level. There also is a shortage of qualified high school math teachers because math majors who once might have taught are being drawn to much higher-paying jobs in business and industry, he said.

So, while fewer students are being adequately educated in math, fewer college graduates are available to teach them and the demand for math majors continues to grow.

"I'm concerned whether the higher education system will be able to produce enough well-trained math teachers to satisfy the needs of schools. There are so many opportunities in other areas," Himmelberg said.

"There is still a great need for math in traditional subjects such as engineering and the physical sciences. But now there is a need for math in areas where it hasn't been as important traditionally -- in the social and biological sciences."

"Everywhere you turn, more math knowledge is being required. All areas today have a need of general statistics and a good algebra background can help a student learn to think and to practice self-discipline," Himmelberg said.

Himmelberg said that the use of symbols and symbol manipulation has increased in business, economics and the obvious field of computers.

Math majors can enter the work force as statisticians, applied mathematicians and computer scientists. There are an infinite number of fields within these general areas, Himmelberg said.

Named February Waiter

Edward Wise was selected as the outstanding waiter in Nichols Dining Hall for the month of February.

Key Club Assists Special Winter Olympics

Eleven members of the SJMS Key Club assisted in running the recreation center for the Winter Special Olympics held in Salina Feb. 6-8. Maj. Larry Lysell, Director of Admissions, is the club sponsor.

More than 1700 handicapped people participated in the games this year. It is the third year that Major Lysell and the SJMS club have managed the center.

Major Lysell said, "This has become one of our two major service projects through Key club, and is our most rewarding." Two of the Cadets received letters of thanks from one of the participants. She included a stick of gum in each letter. The Cadets thought it was a nice gesture coming from someone less gifted than themselves.

Participating were Shawn Goforth, Richard Fawcett, Tom Bowler, Paul Unterweger, Mike Hill, Jim Foster, Rick Martin, Walter Barrier, Shawn Proctor, Brian Bradford and Vince Raetz. Brian Breckencamp from the Lower School also helped.

Members of the club worked at the Kiwanis pancake day, Feb. 21. Key Club is a branch of Kiwanis International which serves high school boys and girls across the nation.

Student Interns

Eileen Curran, a Marymount College senior majoring in speech and drama and social work, is taking her field placement in social work at St. John's Military School this semester. She is working with Nancy Swisher, St. John's associate counselor. Miss Curran is a native of Greeley, Neb.

Named Cadet-of-Month

Robert Hamilton was honored as the Cadet-of-the-Month for February according to Lt. Col. Paul H. Kellogg, Commandant. The citation read: "Your academic performance, attention to duty, military bearing, courtesy and demeanor, are to be commended. Your selection is the result of recommendations by a committee of your peers, faculty and staff."
