Summer School Program Set For Third Year

Final preparations for the third St. John's Military School Summer School on the campus of Colorado State University, Ft. Collins, have been made. Lt. Col. R. L. Guernsey, Summer Session Director, was in Ft. Collins during spring furlough making final plans for the session.

The eight-week session will begin June 12 and end Aug. 5.

Colonel Guernsey said that priority for admittance will be given to Cadets although the enrollment is not limited to Cadets.

The program is non-military. Students will live in the new Sigma Nu fraternity house on the campus. Boys will have access to all University facilities including classrooms, health center, student center, and athletic and recreational facilities.

Colonel Guernsey said the emphasis of the program is placed on the academics. Classes are held for six hours each day. He said it is an excellent opportunity for a boy to earn extra credit or do to make-up work. A boy can earn 1½ units of credit during the eight-week session.

"But it is not all work," said Colonel Guernsey. "Our recreation plans include fishing and camping trips, sight-seeing trips a visit to the Cheyenne Frontier days, Cheyenne, Wyo. and a visit to the Air Academy."

The staff will be about the same as last year.

Cost of the program is $650. Brochures and other information can be obtained by writing Colonel Guernsey at St. John's Military School.
