They Gave Their Best

Two great American Presidents — Abraham Lincoln and George Washington — were very different and yet very much alike, too.

Neither man wanted war. Neither wanted the noise and nonsense of public acclaim.

Each man wanted only that which was best for his country.

Each gave his best, did his best as God gave him the power to understand that best.

Washington — A Great Man

. . . not because he was born to the landed aristocracy of Virginia.

He rose above wealth to render service to his country.

. . . not because he was a strong, handsome, well-dressed gentleman. He refused the crown of a king to give the colonies a chance as a democracy.

. . . not because he fought a war for glory, but because he united a nation.

. . . not because he loved to fight, but rather because right was more important than might. "My first wish," he wrote, "is to see this plague of mankind — warfare — banished from off the earth."

. . . not because of his fine education. Instead, he used his learning to rally his troops around a new concept of freedom.

. . . not because he commanded an army but because he suffered with the short rations and ragged clothing of his citizen troops who fought for freedom.

. . . not because he was elected President, but rather because he united thirteen belligerent colonies.

Lincoln — A Great Man

. . . not because he was born in a log cabin amid humble surroundings.

He rose above poverty and substituted service.

. . . not because he looked like a scarecrow most his life. His kindness and understanding made him most handsome. He was a king among men.

. . . not because he wished brother to fight brother, but because he united a people.

. . . not because he wanted war, but rather "We cannot escape history . . . We assure freedom. The way is plain, peaceful, generous, just . . . We shall nobly save or meanly lose, the last best hope of earth."

. . . not because of his self education. Instead, he used his learning to rally his troops around a new concept of justice.

. . . not because he was a Commander-in-Chief of the Union Army, but because of his compassion for the Americans of the Confederacy.

. . . not because he was elected President, but rather because he re-united the States.

8th Graders Study Advanced Science

Seniors take ACT's

Several Senior Cadets took the American College tests Feb. 18 at Kansas Wesleyan University. These tests are used by many colleges and universities for admission purposes.

To See Film

A film on the Peace Corps, "Mission of Discovery", will be shown at an assembly on Feb. 22 in Armstrong Chapel.

To Bean Supper

The Cadets were guests of the School at a "ham and beans" supper served by the Heart of American Lion's Club Feb. 18 in the 4-H building. The School purchased tickets which were made available for Cadet use. Nichols Dining hall was closed for the evening.
